Report on Guest Lecture – “Mock Stock Trading”

Date: 8th of August, 2016

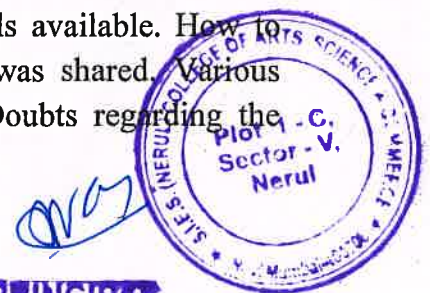

Time Duration: 8.45am – 10.30am (1 hour, 45 minutes.)

Venue: SIES (Nerul) College of Arts, Science and Commerce.

On 8th of August, 2016, the students of Second and Third Year of Bachelors in Financial Markets course were given a fortunate chance to be a part of a seminar discussing the financial markets, its functioning, and tips on how to invest in equity markets. This seminar was conducted by alumni of BFM, Mehmood Ulde and Akash Nimje. Mehmood Ulde has been an investor in the stock market for over 6 years and Akash Nimje is an active participant in the derivatives market.

The event started with the coordinator of BFM addressing the crowd. She explained the aim of the seminar and its importance as a financial markets student. Since both the speakers were well acquainted with the audience they started with an informal introduction. The first speaker Mehmood Ulde started the session with a discussion of the equity markets and checking the knowledge of the audience. The questions asked included equity markets' functioning, its fluctuations, factors related to it namely, the regulators, important institutions, etc. there was an air of impertinence, therefore the students freely put forward their queries and doubts and both speakers were glad to be of help. Mehmood Ulde gave the audience inkling on how to invest and where to invest. He discussed various technicalities and terminologies of market pertaining trade and investment; the regulator of securities market and its role in the market functioning and Major Stock Exchanges and the services these institutions provide. A brief discussion took place with regards to the indices of the stock exchange which lead to the explanation describing how the indices are calculated and how one can understand the market movements through them. Genial arguments were placed, which were elaborated and explained. The speaker gave us a summarized image of the fabric of financial markets.

The session was then continued by Akash Nimje. As a part of his introduction he shared the experiences as a derivative investor. The audience was asked several questions based on derivatives and its various properties as a financial security. He continued this session as a part monologue where he explained the types of derivatives, how it originated. By showing various methods of analyzing the securities' movements the importance of analysis and acumen of the market was expressed. He also showed various types of analytical tools available. How to break down the chart for better understanding and decision making was shared. Various concepts like speculation, hedging were interpreted by the speaker. Doubts regarding the topics discussed were then welcomed by the speaker and uncomplicated clarifications were also provided.

One of the most appealing segments of the seminar was the display of 'Live Trading Screen'. The projected display showed us the real-time market movements of the companies listed in National Stock Exchange. In the screen were various columns and rows; which were explained by both the speakers. The fluctuations taking place were asked to be elaborated as to why there was a change and what would be the right adjudication considering these fluctuations. There was ascintillating participation from the assemblage. Various advices and suggestions were put forward by both speakers and correction of errors and misunderstandings were made.

The session which took place under the supervision of teachers from the BFM faculty was concluded past 10.30 am. As the session came to an end the speakers gave heart felt advices by asking the students not to invest while being avaricious; they added that, being patient and alert is the only key to achieving success not only in financial markets but also in ones' life. Advices given by both the speakers were understood and accepted by the audience earnestly. The session was highly spirited without any dull movements. The students present felt happy and honored to be a part of it. By the time the discussions ceased, the students had a clearer image of financial markets and a more vivid idea of how these factors affect the plans of their future educational and professional careers.
